

Possible questions for the “students teach other students” exercise

Be advised that while the questions below can be used, they overlap. They are also not adapted to the curriculum you teach. For this reason, it would be best for you to adopt some questions but still think of some of your own.

- Even though it is a wealthy country, there is still poverty in Germany. What measures does the German government take against it? Are these measures also an option for other countries?
- How is poverty in Germany, Kenya and South Africa defined? Which measures are taken against it? How likely are they to succeed in your own country of origin?
- Research the attendance rate of children aged 5 in education. Is there a development visible? Which measures might have improved over the last 20 years?
- Are men or women, seniors or young adults more likely to be affected by poverty in Germany, Kenya or South Africa? Are there any similarities between the countries? Why?
